WOMAN WILL RUN MODEL THEATRE FOR SMART SET.

Mrs. Robert Osborne Is Making Extensive Alterations in Berkeley Lyceum.

MRS. ROBERT OSBORNE.

Another woman manager will enter the New York theatrical field in October, when Mrs. Robert Osborne will open the Berkeley Lyceum, in West Forty-fourth street, as a playhouse for the smart set. Mrs. Osborne has excellent associations in the venture and intends to introduce novelties that she believes will be appreciated.

"Workmen will begin extensive alterations to the house next Tuesday," said Mrs. Osborne to The Evening World to-day. "The stage will be enlarged and deepened, a large drawing-room where patrons may meet each other between the acts will be arranged, and color and lighting scheme of my own will be installed.

"It is my belief that a theatre should not be garish. In my little house I shall attempt to have the decorations and lights so gentle and harmonious that they will be soothing to the mind and restful to the eye.

Prices Not to Exceed $2.50. "Although I shall bid for exclusive patronage, the prices will not be inordinately high. The house is small and the productions will be expensive, but I do not think I shall charge more than $2.50 for the best seats. This does not exceed the regular tariff in the district."
